HISTORY OF THE CARRIAGE HOUSE BUILDING

The Frohlichstein Carriage House is one of the few remaining slave quarters and carriage houses in Mobile. This interesting structure was once connected to one of the Pincus Twins of the 357 Church Street address. The building had to be relocated because it interfered with the new Auditorium Drive for our new $15,000,000.00 municipal auditorium complex.

This building was constructed in 1862 by William Frohlichstein on property acquired from Mobile's famed Bishop Portier. The Frohlichstein family, also well-known in Mobile, had migrated from Bavaria and prospered as merchants. William Frohlichstein had a dry goods business located at 41-43 Dauphin Street.

This building itself housed the slaves on the upper floor with an enclosed walkway, which is now the outside stairs and the original iron grill windows speak of necessary security measures. The ground floor was the carriage house and stable in which three carriages, a Victoria, a surrey, and a pony cart were kept.

A Frohlichstein that was famous in more recent times was Esau, one of the first Americans — and the only Mobilian — to lose his life in the occupation of Vera Cruz in 1914. He was a member of the landing party aboard the USS New Hampshire. There were twenty casualties in that landing. Mobilians eulogized this soldier with a day of mourning and ceremony accorded only a great hero. Newspaper clippings and a picture of a memorial plaque is at the entrance.

The slave quarters and Carriage House have been restored and decorated with a continental and colonial flair to accent Mobile's multi-national heritage with the mid 1800's in mind. We have named the upstairs dining room appropriately, the Heritage Room; the lounge, The Blacksmith's Shop; and the yard of course, The Fountain Room.

Paintings, photographs and other memorabilia have been provided, and evoke memories of an era of gracious living, typical of romantic Old Mobile.
